Comments: I have lived in Las Vegas, Nv. since Nov. 1962. And during this time I have lived here, I, like many other locals have been employed either directly or indirectly by the gaming industry. Although however good that employment has been, it does have its down side too. One of which local politicians have been trying to address for years, and that is business diversification. I remember as a young person growing up here my father, like many other people, worked up at the test site. And I remember that it was very good pay, though it was hard work. My father worked as a lineman for one of the many sub-contractors at the Mercury Test Site. This had come to make me realize that as southern Nevadan's, we need to open our arms up to all opportunities. I really don't know what the fuss is all about anyway. As far as I have seen this project is going to be located away from populated areas, although transfer would go through communities, and this would also present vast employment opportunities to our area.
